

Passage (2)

Duties

Private detectives and investigators help attorneys, businesses, and the public with a variety of problems. Their services include protecting businesses from theft and vandalism, conducting background investigations, and gathering evidence for trials. Some detectives concentrate on providing protection and investigators specialize in gathering information, many do some of each.

Most private detectives and investigators are trained to perform physical surveillance, often for long periods of time, in a car or van. They may observe a site, such as the home or office of a suspect, from a hidden location. The surveillance continues using cameras, binoculars, or a car phone, until the desired information is obtained. They also search online computer databases containing probate records, motor-vehicle registrations, court records, and other information.

Private detectives and investigators obtain information by interviewing witnesses and conducting investigations or criminal trials. They get cases involving missing persons or are assigned to cases by the manager of firm they work for. Investigations involve verification of facts, such as an individual's place of employment, income. This might involve a phone call or a visit to the workplace.

Private detectives and investigators who work for retail stores or malls are responsible for controlling store merchandise by apprehending and preventing theft. They detect the attempts to steal merchandise or destroy store property. They detect the activities of shoplifters, delivery personnel, and even store employees. They may also assist in the opening and closing of the store.

Working Conditions

Private detectives and investigators often work irregular hours because of the need to conduct surveillance and contact people who may not be available during normal working hours. Morning, evening, weekend, and night day work is common.

Many private detectives and investigators spend much time away from their offices conducting interviews or doing surveillance, but some work in their office most of the time conducting computer searches and making phone calls. Some split their time between office and field. Some of them have to confront criminals so the job becomes stressful and dangerous.

Qualifications and Training

There are no formal education requirements for most private detective and investigation jobs, though most employers prefer high school graduates; many private detectives have college degrees. Retired law enforcement officers, military investigators, and government agents frequently become private detectives and investigators as a second career.
